NEIGHBORHOODS V

INVESTIGATIONS

SHOP V

PODCASTS

NEWSLETTERS

Block Club Eats LGBTQ+ News Weather Things To Do Openings & Closings TOPICS Business

ARTS & CULTURE

DONATE

Chicago Quilombo, A Live/Work

HYDE PARK, WOODLAWN, SOUTH SHORE

LATEST STORIES

Young Black South Siders 'Autonomy' With plans for 10 apartments — five with rents under $500 a month — and a community center, business incubator and restaurant, organizers say the project will be a hub for education, activism and fun.

By Maxwell Evans September 12, 2025 Credibility: Original Reporting Sources Cited

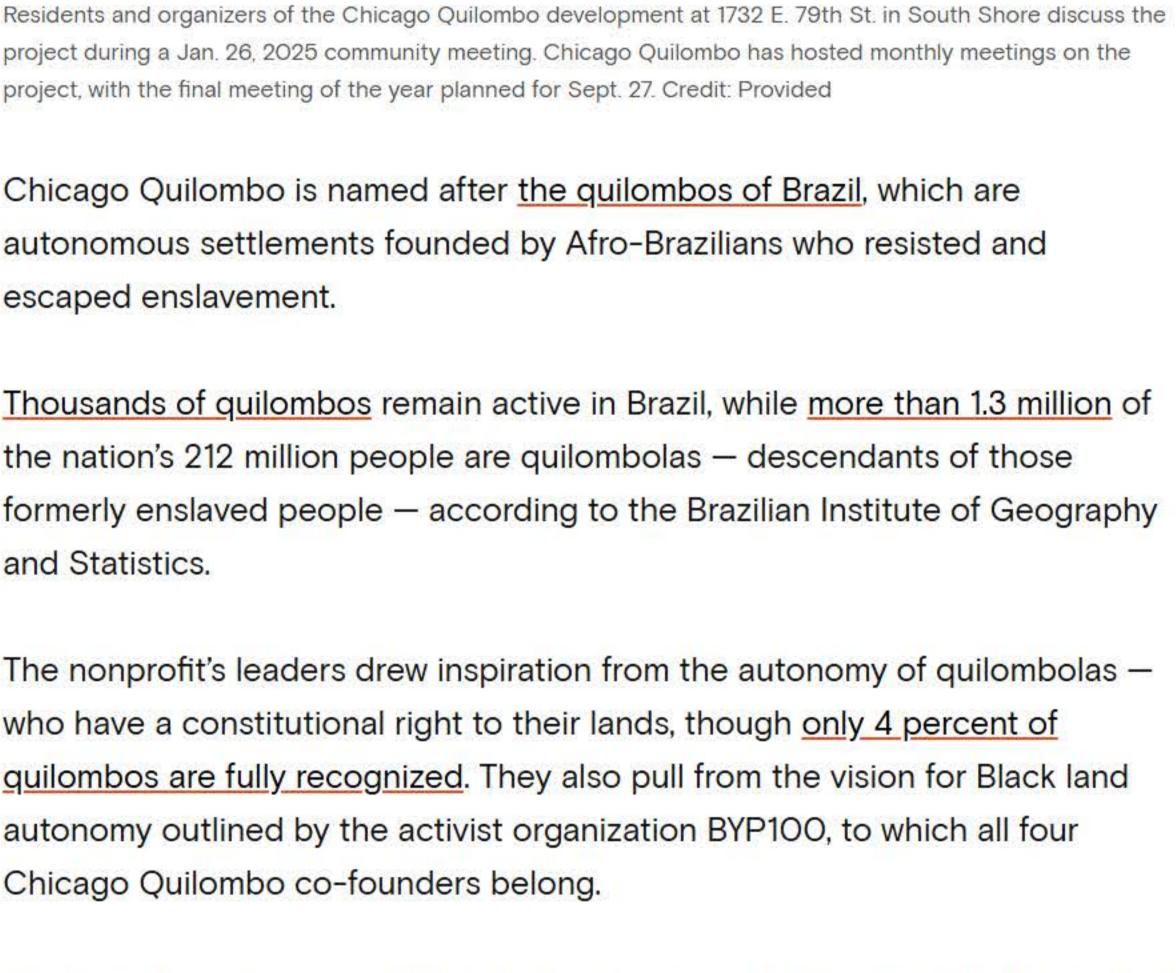

Chicago Quilombo's cofounders — Cosette Ayele, Sarina Shane, Inez White and Jeffrey Hitchens — have hosted monthly meetings on the project as they

The next meeting on the project plans is 2-4 p.m. Sept. 27 at the Quarry, 2423 E. 75th St. in South Shore. Neighbors can register for the meeting here.

historic disinvestment in Black communities — we have been left with almost nothing," Ayele said. "We wanted to create a quilombo as a space for people who are escaping from the racism and gender-based violence that systems

The first step in establishing Chicago Quilombo is to fix the "despicable conditions" of the building's 10 apartments, which were neglected by its

Given the living conditions, Chicago Quilombo waived rents for the remainder put on us, so we can have a place that can be a refuge."

tenants move out and renovations begin, Ayele said. Once the apartments are rehabbed, five will be available at market rate, while the other five will be available for $350-$500 per month. Organizers intend for the apartments to house adults aged 18-35 — with a particular focus on those 20-29 — who are already living on the South Side and identify as Black,

Amenities planned for building residents and neighbors include a community center that will feature a conference room, co-working space and cultural

The center can also serve as "a hub for movement building," connecting to actually change systems of oppression," Ayele said.

available to entrepreneurs on a sliding fee scale.

residents to organizations like BYP100 and Southside Together, which "are doing powerful work and gathering Black young adults and people of all ages

The marketplace will host up to 20 small businesses that would otherwise not have a physical location to sell their items. Space in the market will be programs like wellness workshops, events to find new hobbies and activities

Entrepreneurs will ideally use the market as an incubator, building their customer bases at Chicago Quilombo before moving into the community's numerous vacant storefronts, Ayele said. The restaurant will likely be one of the later aspects of the development to come to fruition, Ayele said. Diners will be able to browse items from the marketplace while they await their food, in a concept similar to a Cracker

Once the various aspects of the building are open and sustainable, Chicago

Quilombo plans to launch a "mobile crisis team" for residents of South Shore

The vision is for the crisis team to offer neighbors "something outside of police

Ayele said. The Chicago Quilombo co-founders are "abolitionists" who believe

"We're hoping, by all of us doing and being part of this work, that we're not only Ayele said. "We know a better economy generates more safety — more than a

Chicago Quilombo owns the building and has the funds needed to start the redevelopment process, while organizers will continue to raise money to finish creating more economic development for this area, but also more safety," to call" when they experience issues like personal disputes or loud noises,

"we can care for one another" with proper tools and training, she said.

instead seek grants, city funding and rents from the market-rate apartments to pay the bills, Ayele said. Ald. Michelle Harris (8th) recently rezoned several properties in the 1700 block

The nonprofit will not pursue federal funding or housing subsidies, and will

The alderperson recently arranged a meeting between the developers of various projects along the 79th Street corridor — including Chicago Quilombo and the SUBCO Connect-A-Block coalition to ensure its members could weigh in on the plans, Rider said.

Alvin Rider, Harris' advisor for community engagement and economic of 79th Street in a play to control the properties' future, a move which drew criticism from interested developers and some neighbors. The Chicago Quilombo site was not rezoned. Harris has been "very supportive" of Chicago Quilombo, particularly as the nonprofit has held community meetings and used neighbors' feedback to shape the development plans, Ayele said. For example, the planned restaurant will not serve alcohol, as neighbors urged them against opening another place

Harris thinks the project is "going to be a good fit for 79th, along with the possible community restaurant and with the residential piece," Rider said.

Support Local News!

© 2025 Block Club Chicago

to buy liquor along 79th Street, she said.

development, confirmed Harris' support this week.

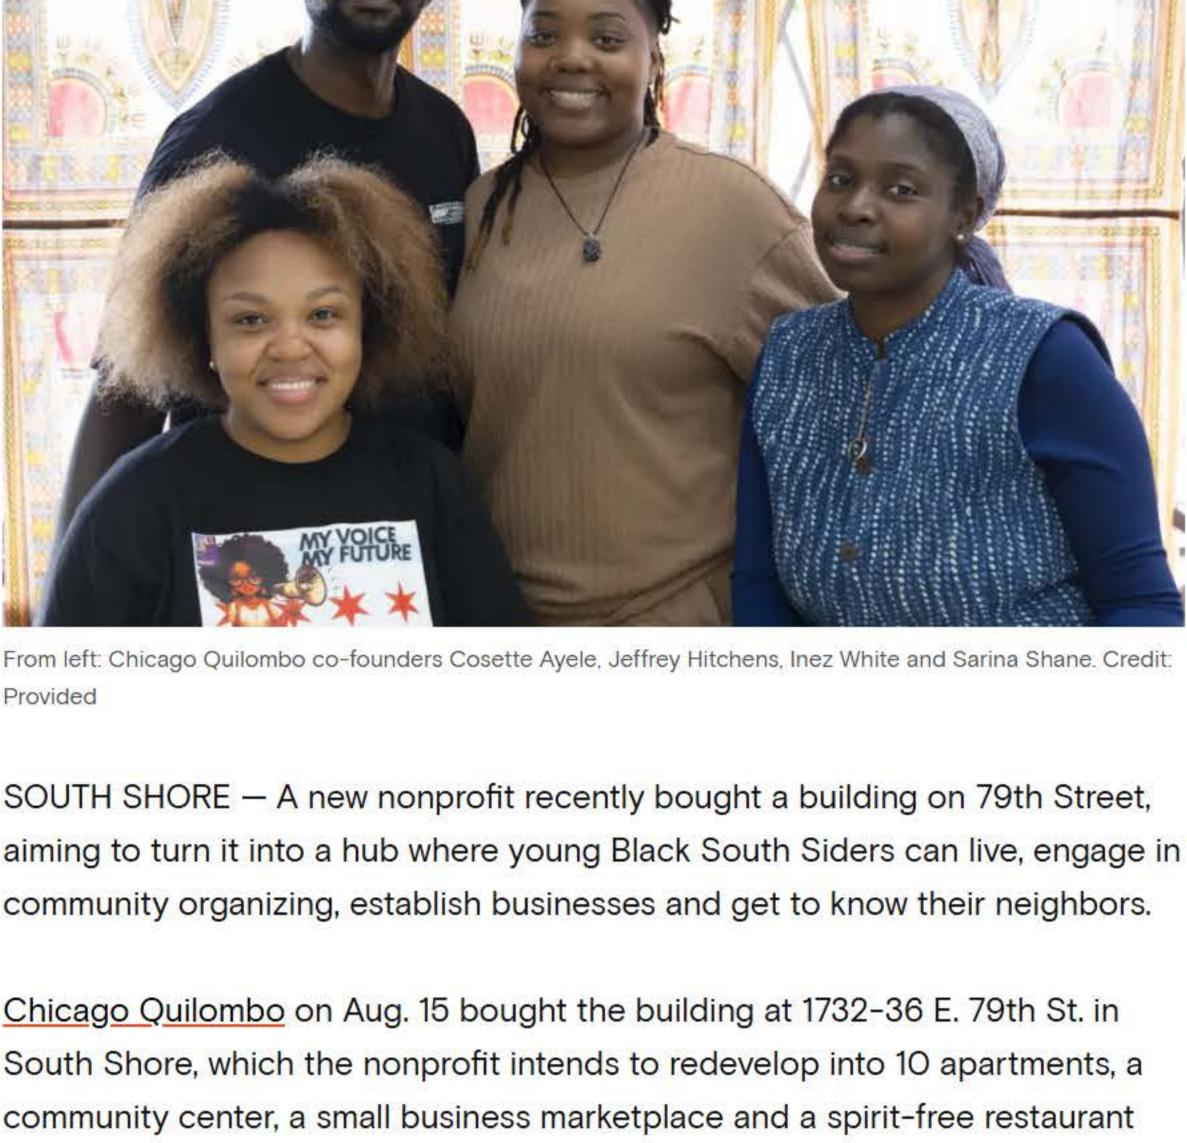

Subscribe to Block Club Chicago, an independent, 501(c)(3), journalist-run newsroom. Every dime we make funds reporting from Chicago's neighborhoods. Already subscribe? Click here to gift a subscription, or you Block Club Chicago is a nonprofit news organization dedicated to delivering reliable, nonpartisan and essential coverage of Chicago's diverse neighborhoods.

Powered by Newspack Privacy Policy

Building In South Shore, Aims To Give

featuring Black cuisines.

renovate the apartments. They aim to open the community center in 2027. "My hope for Chicago Quilombo is that it is a space that centers not just the needs of Black young adults, but also fun, learning and connecting for Black young adults across the South Side of Chicago," Ayele said.

"The fact is, in Chicago — due to systemic racism, gender-based violence and of the five existing residents' leases. The nonprofit will also provide relocation assistance — including the first month's rent at their new places — when Ayele said.

previous owner, Ayele said.

around dance and movement.

Barrel, she said.

and Avalon Park.

carceral response to poverty does."

the projects to be housed within, Ayele said.

can support Block Club with a tax-deductible donation.

"We're happy to get that building back online to a good owner."

